Formed in January, 2011, the mobile game owner Animoca have discovered a recipe for international success, with more than 115 million downloads and 100 monthly sessions CEO David Kim, who once served as CEO of Lycos, and his co-founder Yat Siu have found hits with games like Pretty Pet Salon, Pet Cafe, Stellar Escape, and, recently, Star Girl

They also have inked deals to develop and publish mobile games based on popular entertainment IP for example Mr Bean, the British comedy tv program, and Ultraman, the Japanese pop culture icon

According to Gamer Segmentation 2012: The New Faces of Gamers, the newest report from your NPD Group, there are an estimated 211 that play games, a 5 % decline, or lack of close to 12 million gamers, in comparison to 2011

Of the six gamer segments in the report, only mobile gamers and digital gamers saw increases in the number of gamers in comparison to 2011, with mobile gamers up 9 percentage points to 22 percent and digital gamers up 4 percentage points to 16 percent All other gamer segments, which include core gamers, family+kid gamers, light PC gamers, and avid PC gamers, experienced declines, with family+kid gamers experiencing and enjoying the most significant decline of approximately 17

This seems to become the contrary and this company is breaking barriers

I spoke with all the senior executives at Animoca to learn why their franchise titles are very adorably popular in addition to their company is undoubtedly successful

Marianne Pfeifer: How unorthodox is Animoca's business strategy

Is it disruptive towards the mobile app industry or perhaps it keeping up while using consumption of an mobile gaming market

Yat Siu: Our approach is unorthodox compared with other mobile gaming companies because we place stronger emphasis around the 'long tail'

I would go in terms of calling our business structure intentionally disruptive because it could be the exact complete opposite of the traditional hit-driven approach you see in the app publishing world, which emphasizes several popular titles that generate the most of a company's revenues (one recent instance of this approach is Supercell as well as their mega-hit Clash of Clans)

Animoca offers an unusually broad replacement for consumers to be able to appeal for the long tail of sales distribution

We don't merely sell large quantities of a number of popular goods such as the Pretty Pet Salon franchise

We also sell small quantities of numerous different goods you might never know of, but which quickly add up

Mining the long tail just isn't a new strategy by any means but we presume Animoca was one of the first to adopt it inside world of mobile app games

Monetizing a diverse range of titles using the long tail is as lucrative as the regular hit-based approach, significantly boosting our revenues while allowing us to experiment and study on a huge segment in the market which is chronically under-utilized

The long tail also confers a diploma of security and risk distribution: that is amazing your company relies heavily on just one product and another happens to that product - so what can you fall back on

Marianne Pfeifer: Consumers are prepared to pay for memberships to achieve the content they want

What is your opinion on social gaming changing to your more advertising aggregate i

David Kim: In-game advertising is a natural evolution that everyone knew would eventually permeate to mobile platforms

A number of years ago, online community and online games began to allow users gain access to premium content without needing to use real money, so long as those users were still able to deliver some type of value (for instance, via increased social media exposure or new player recruitment)

As the employment and function of cellular devices continue to boost, it's only natural for advertisers to get visibility on mobile apps, because that is where the audiences are right now

The ubiquity and efficacy of mobile advertising, including mobile gaming, continue to be at the immature stage; I believe how the real magnitude of mobile advertising within the near future could possibly be massive, exceeding current estimates

Marianne Pfeifer: You are already quoted you want to release an app a day

Have you met that goal or succeeded the main comment you made to Kathleen De Vere

Our studios work around time thinking of fresh ideas for great content

In 2012 we released 251 apps on various stores and platforms, so that you could say we're nearly 70% there
